FIRE ACTIVITY:

The Dollar Lake Fire is currently 11,510 acres and 0% containment.

Dollar Lake Fire Incident Update Date: August 25, 2025

The fire was active last night, with two heads, or areas of fire growth. One head grew to the south and the other to the east-southeast. There was also burning in the interior. Despite the fire growth, there have been no injuries reported nor structures lost.

There are now two structure groups for the fire and they have been busy defending numerous sites, including outfitter camps, feed lots, the Red Cliff Bible Camp, and the historic Billy Wells Camp. In addition to the structure groups, firefighters working on the fireline continue to improve containment lines and scout locations for additional containment and contingency lines. Their work is augmented with substantial air support.

Monsoonal moisture continues to increase in the fire area, though it does bring with it the possibility of gusty and erratic outflow winds.

WEATHER:

Monsoonal moisture continues to increase over the next several days. Showers and thunderstorms increase after 12:00 p.m. today. Chances of wetting rain increase to around 30-40%. The trend is for cooler daytime temperatures and higher relative humidities through Wednesday. Current models indicate a 50% chance of over one inch of total rainfall over the 72-hour period of Monday through Thursday with an 80% chance of seeing over 0.5 inches of rainfall during that time.
