Fire Weather: Wet thunderstorms are expected over sections of eastern Oregon and possibly northern Washington today. On Friday an approaching cold front will bring rain to western Washington and trigger increasing westerly winds east of the Cascades. On Saturday and Sunday a deepening trough off California will create some lingering showers mainly over Oregon. Temperatures will be cooling below average through the weekend.

Check your NWS forecasts for the latest details in your area.

Fire Potential: A steady decline in fire danger is anticipated through the weekend and early next week. Lightning over eastern Oregon today is not expected to create enough ignitions to boost the potential to add any new large fires.

Preparedness Level:
- Northwest: 4
- National: 4

- John Saltenberger