

DailyOutlookNorthern California Daily Outlook

Issued: Tuesday, June 27, 2017

Weather Synopsis:

 Isolated Afternoon/Evening Thunderstorms Northern Areas Again Today *****

 Gusty westerly winds in The Delta region next few days *****

A low pressure trough will be over the North Ops region again today for what should be the coolest day of the next week. There is a chance for more isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms across the northern counties again today that are likely to be a mix of the wet to relatively dry variety. Higher pressure will return to the region starting Wednesday and gradually get stronger to bring in warmer temperatures. There is some chance a small weather system will arrive from off the Pacific Friday that could stir up a better chance of isolated afternoon and evening and mostly wet thunderstorms across the northern and eastern mountains, otherwise conditions will be dry across the North Ops region for the next 7 days. Early next week appears somewhat cooler with more seasonable temperatures again as another, larger-but-not-terribly-strong trough moves over the Pacific NW and Northern California.

Outside of some gusty winds in The Delta region through at least Thursday with 20-30 mph gusts reasonably common in the favored areas, no significant winds are expected across the North Ops region this week. Some relatively light northerly winds may develop late this weekend. The warmest inland areas are expected to range from 100-105 through the weekend with some chance of a bit of cooling Friday if that low actually moves into the region. In general, afternoon highs will be 5-10 degrees above normal in the warmest areas.

BB

NO GRAPHICS AVAILABLE TODAY

SORRY FOR ANY INCONVENIENCE

3 to 7 Outlook: Thursday Through SundayCoast Range Westward:

Dry and warm through the period with a chance of afternoon and evening thunderstorms over the northern mountains Friday.

Sacramento Valley and surrounding foothills:

Dry and warm through the period with a chance of afternoon and evening thunderstorms over the northern and eastern mountains Friday. Gusty westerly winds through The Delta region Thursday at least.

Cascade-Sierra Nevada from 3500' to Crest, NE California and NW Nevada:

Dry and warm through the period with a chance of afternoon and evening thunderstorms over the mountains Friday.